A stuffed elephant and an American Girl doll belonging to alleged kidnapping victim Reigh “Snooks” Boss and left behind in Baltimore in August when she was rescued by the FBI will be home with the child in time for Christmas.

The reunion is part of an agreement struck yesterday by her suddenly metrosexual father Christian Karl Gerhartsreiter - the German gypster calling himself Clark Rockefeller - and assistant Suffolk District Attorney David Deakin.

The 7-year-old Londoner’s much-missed toys are to be retrieved from the Baltimore condo where her delusional dad hoped to raise her after he abducted her last summer during a supervised visit in the Back Bay. They are to be turned over to Boston Police Detective Joseph Leeman, who’ll serve as Santa.

Three keys associated with the property at 618 Ploy St. were returned to Gerhartsreiter yesterday in return for his acknowledging he had them on him when arrested.

“Clark was very concerned that we send someone down to Baltimore immediately upon receiving the keys to the condo. Two of his daughter’s dolls are in the condo,” said his attorney Timothy Bradl.

Though behind bars since his arrest, the divorced Gerhartsreiter is moving on, as evidenced by his plans to sell the home - as well as the surprise makeover he unveiled yesterday - upgrading from dork to dandy, with Sarah Palinesque specs.

“He needed updated glasses. No big deal,” Bradl said when asked why Gerhartsreiter, 47, dropped the Woody Allen prepster look.

Gerhartsreiter’s defense team is working out details with the FBI as to how 160 1-ounce gold coins worth $140,000 will be returned to him, along with $6,480 cash.

Prosecutors are holding another 161 coins and $6,335 more in cash as evidence.

Gerhartsreiter has also been called a “person of interest” by homicide detectives investigating the 1985 disappearance of his former San Marino, Calif., landlords Johnathan and Linda Sohus.
